Another Paradox? The Life Satisfaction of Older Hispanic Immigrants in the United States

Rocío Calvo, PhD, Dawn C. Carr, PhD, Christina Matz-Costa, PhD

First Published January 14, 2016 | research-article

Article Information
Volume: 29 issue: 1, page(s): 3-24
Article first published online: January 14, 2016; Issue published: February 1, 2017
DOI: <https://doi.org/10.1177/0898264315624901>

Abstract

Objective: This study examines the life satisfaction of older Hispanic immigrants in the United States, and to identify factors that influence their life satisfaction. Data from 9,798 individuals age 60 and above from the Health and Retirement Study (HRS) were used to estimate ordinary least squares (OLS) regression models. Results: Hispanic immigrants reported the highest levels of life satisfaction of all groups. Wealthier older adults, who were socially engaged, had social support, and experienced fewer functional limitations and lower exposure to discrimination, were more satisfied with their lives in the overall sample. Interaction effects revealed that although education was associated with greater life satisfaction only among non-Hispanic Whites, co-residing with children was associated with greater life satisfaction only among Hispanics. Discussion: Although older Hispanic immigrants had the least amount of socioeconomic resources of all groups in our study, they were the most satisfied with their lives. Possible explanations and directions for future research are discussed.

Hispanics are the fastest growing segment of the older adult population in the United States, and by 2050, they are expected to become the largest minority group of older adults in the country (Vincent & Velkoff, 2010). One of the key drivers of this increase is immigration. The older
